

The Cool & Creepy Bat Caves of Santiago de Anaya, Mexico

Posted At : October 25, 2013 4:28 PM | Posted By : Dipika Chawla

Related Categories: adventure tourism, Mexico

It's almost Halloween--the perfect time to highlight an awesome creepy bat cave where adventurous travelers go to climb, rappel, and even play paintball! There's also a 2,625-foot zipline that runs through the cave's chambers. And when we say bat cave, we're not talking about a secret superhero lair - this place is home to six species of migratory bats!

This cool, off-the-beaten path destination is located in the Mezquital Valley, an indigenous region in central Mexico. Grutas Xoxafi, a nearby ecotourism center, offers comfortable accommodations, campgrounds, delicious local food, and guided tours. Check out their SustainableTrip profile for more photos and information about activities!

